Get your passport to discovery & adventure

by Patrick Hascall

At WCC, McCoy enjoys the chase and the challenge of the unknown. “First, you have to figure out if that’s what you are turning over in your head,” he says, “if it is, then you have to figure out what an earthquake, a volcanic eruption—what you look at the landscape, the climate, you have to figure out how it all fits together.”

Today, McCoy is WCC’s “Indiana Jones.” He is well known and outspoken in the field of archaeology at WCC since 1990, McCoy McCoy

McCoy is a professor of geology and oceanographic science at WCC. He received a B.S. and M.S. in geology from the University of Hawaii and completed his Ph.D. in geology at Stanford University. McCoy

He is a voracious reader and he has traveled extensively throughout the Mediterranean and Aegean regions. He has published several papers and books on geology and archaeology. McCoy

He has a passion for geology and oceanography and he is an avid traveler. McCoy

McCoy has traveled Greece for over 20 years, conducting geological and archaeological research in the region.

He is trying to combine the fields of geology and archaeology. These two are often considered separate disciplines, but McCoy believes they are interconnected.

McCoy continued, “For example, I am working on eight archeological sites. At one of these sites I think I see building damage from a tsunami—how did this occur?”
